

Truman Hoyle strengthens across the board

SYDNEY FIRM Truman Hoyle has announced a number of promotions and appointments across its communications, industrial relations and intellectual property practice groups.

Hamish Fraser, a member of the firm's communications group, has been promoted from special counsel to partner. Fraser advises telecommunications, internet and technology clients on regulatory, commercial and dispute matters. This includes advising in relation to intellectual property protection, licensing and distribution, confidentiality, e-commerce, security, IT procurement and outsourcing. Prior to joining the firm in mid-2007, Fraser was a senior counsel with the Optus Group.

Industrial relations lawyer, Tamara Seale, has been promoted to the position of senior lawyer. Seale assists clients with contractual disputes with employees, contracts of employment, termination of employment, redundancies, advice concerning enterprise bargaining, OHS and discrimination matters. She is also an experienced litigator and represents clients before industrial courts and tribunals.

Having moved to Australia from London, Nick Hart has joined Truman Hoyle as a solicitor in the firm's intellectual property practice. Before joining the firm, Hart was the legal affairs manager to Andrew Lloyd Webber's The Really Useful Group, based in London. His career has also included working at the international law firm Slaughter & May and at the London-based entertainment law firm Bray & Kraus Solicitors. Hart will advise the firm's media and technology clients across the Asia-Pacific region.

HAMISH FRASER
TRUMAN HOYLE

A COMMUNICATIONS LAW EXPERT, FORMERLY A SENIOR COUNSEL FOR THE
OPTUS GROUP, BECOMES PARTNER

TAMARA SEALE
TRUMAN HOYLE

AN INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS LAWYER
AND EXPERIENCED LITIGATOR PROMOTED TO SENIOR LAWYER

Send your movers and shakers to appointments@lawyersweekly.com.au