

Truman Hoyle boosts its team by five

FOLLOWING CONTINUED expansion of its Asia Pacific client base, Sydney firm Truman Hoyle has appointed a new partner, along with four new lawyers, across a range of practice areas.

New partner Andrew Seaton has joined the firm's corporate and commercial practice, with a particular focus on corporate regulation and mergers and acquisitions. Seaton will service the firm's new economy clients and has a strong following from clients in the pharmaceutical and manufacturing industries.

In addition, the firm has appointed lawyers Venus Amoro, Clive Lee, Megan

Edwards and Mitchell Kelly. Amoro and Lee have both joined the firm's corporate and commercial practice, Edwards joins the firm's intellectual property and media practice, and Kelly joins the firm's technology practice. Edwards was formerly a counsel with the Australian Broadcasting Corporation while Mitchell was a corporate counsel with Siemens Plc in London.

The firm's managing partner, Shane Barber, said that the appointments would help the firm to meet growing demand from US and Asia Pacific-based technology clients.
